About Rothschild & Concha Y Toro

Almaviva is a joint venture between Baron Philippe de Rothschild, owners of Château Mouton Rothschild, and Chile's largest wine company, Concha y Toro. Founded in the late 1990s, it was conceived as a Chilean wine made to the standards of a Bordeaux classed growth, with its own winery and vineyards at Puente Alto in the Maipo Valley.

The name comes from Count Almaviva, a character in the plays of Beaumarchais, and the label carries a design drawn from Mapuche symbolism. Almaviva is widely regarded as one of South America's leading fine wines and has a well-established secondary market.

About Almaviva EPU, Maipo Valley

EPU is the second wine of Almaviva, its name meaning 'two' in the Mapuche language. It is made from the same Puente Alto vineyards as the grand vin, with a Cabernet Sauvignon-led blend that is more approachable in youth. It offers the estate's ripe, polished style at an earlier drinking age, while still ageing well for several years.
